TRAIL DESCRIPTION

This guide describes the trail starting from the west end off Swasey Drive. The trail climbs over the Shasta Divide into Whiskeytown National Recreation Area from a very picturesque area of public land managed by the Bureau of Land Management. Starting at Swasey Drive and ascending to the pass, the trail explores open meadows, dense chaparral of mostly manzanita, and a shaded oak woodland.

Creeks, springtime wildflowers and terrific views of Mt. Lassen, Redding, and greater Shasta County are seen during the east side climb. The area was used by the Wintu Indians for hundreds of years and more recently, during the Gold Rush Era. Stone walls and some mining prospects are visible.

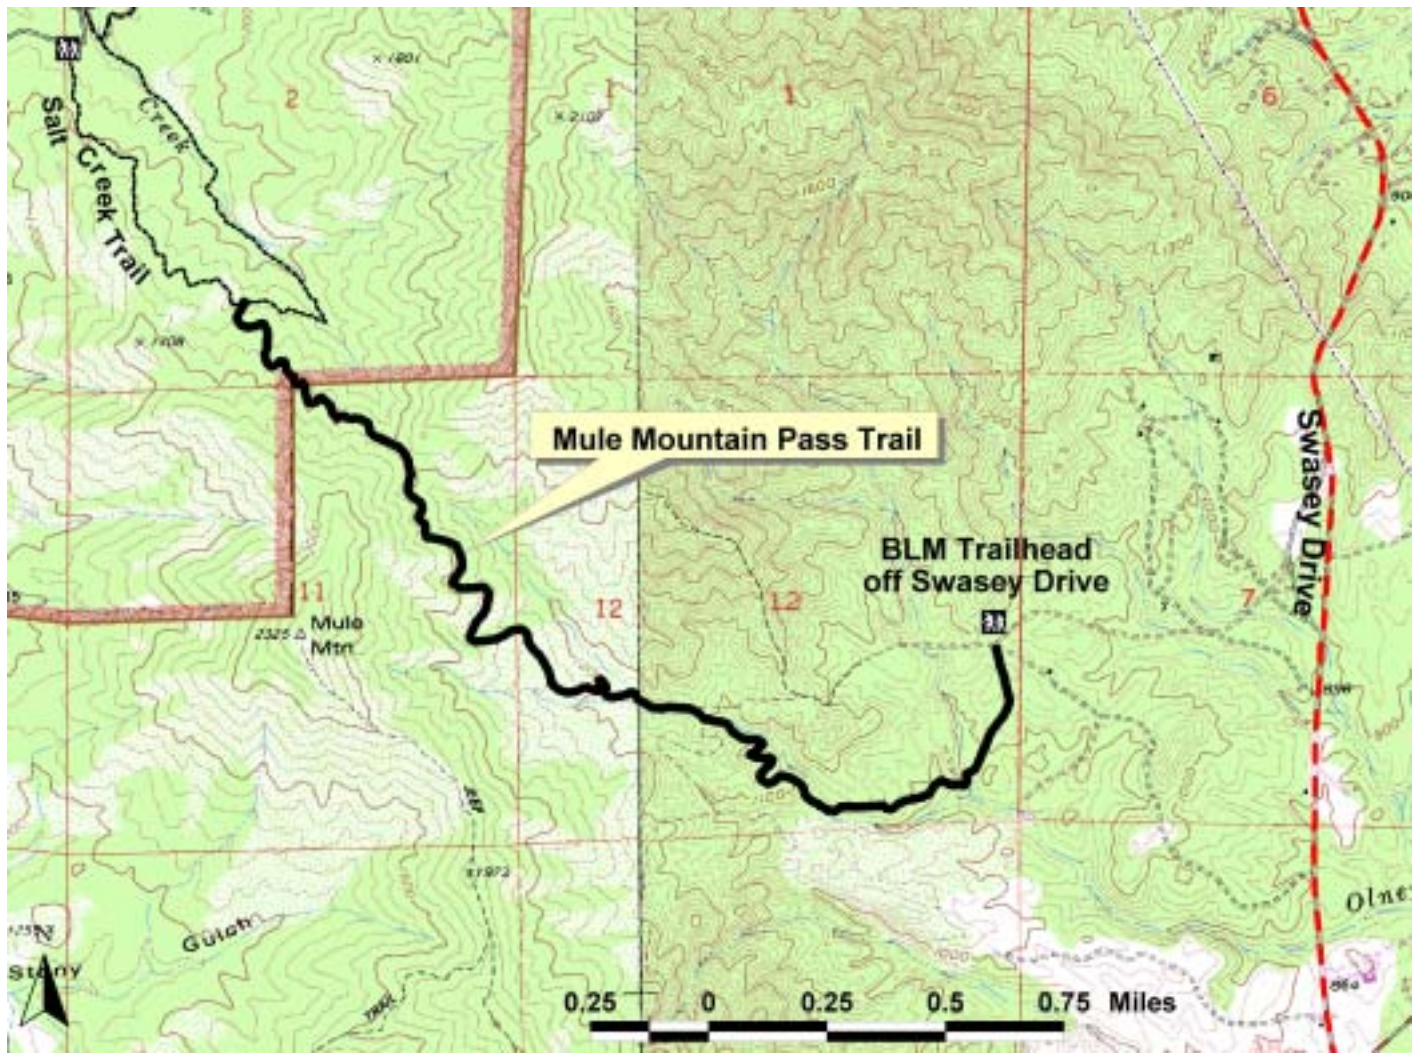

This is the first trail built into Whiskeytown in over 40 years (2004) and was constructed for the comfort of hikers, equestrians and mountain bikers. Grades do not exceed 10%. The path is narrow and winds in and out of the small drainages of Mule Mountain. Once achieving the pass, the trail is all downhill into Whiskeytown and terminates the intersection of the Salt Creek Loop Trail.

Salt Creek Trail is a loop, either direction returns to Mule Town Road. The western loop is best for horseback riders. The eastern loop eventually leads to the junction of the Buck Hollow Trail. Follow the signs on to Mule Town Road to seek civilization.

Beautiful oak trees are found throughout the trail route, along with rocky crags and a wild forest setting.

Terrific views of Mt. Lassen, Shasta County are seen on the east side portion of the trail.

Several creeks and springtime wildflowers are visible along the trail.

This is a narrow, single track trail. Watch for bicyclists, hikers, and equestrians. Always demonstrate good trail etiquette.

Poison Oak is prevalent along the trail, especially on the Swasey Drive end; stay on the trail to avoid contact.
